HERITAGE WITH A MODERN EDGE

Originally designed by Henry Budden and Nicholas Mackey, the building's elaborate use of marble, travertine, terrazzo, and ceramic finishes reflects the stature of the M.W.S. & D. at the time, with this collection of high-quality materials now increasingly rare in buildings. A stunning revival of inter-war period architecture that captures a unique period in history the building was deservedly listed on the New South Wales State Heritage Register in 2002.

Today, this architectural icon has begun a new chapter as the home of Kimpton Margot Sydney. The hotel honours the spirit of this heritage treasure while bringing it into the modern day through inspired, eclectic design and thoughtful programming that together highlight the building's unique historic spaces. In harmoniously marrying the old with the new and offering not just a hotel but a destination for shared experiences, Kimpton Margot Sydney captures the zeitgeist of a vibrant and cosmopolitan 21st-century city.
